YOUR OPTIONS

PARENTING

The Best Decision is an Informed Decision

Assistance

What Other Assistance is Available?

There are a variety of resources available in your community. Parenting classes, assistance with baby items (cribs, clothes, diapers and other necessities), Medicaid, etc. Your Advocate can offer referrals to local resources that are available to you.

You may have the option of living with relatives or close friends. It's important that you have conversations about bringing a child into your living arrangements and how this will affect your relationships.

Is the Father of the Baby Required to Help Me?

Fathers do have legal rights established by law in each state. These rights will vary from state to state. If you make a decision to parent, he will have a responsibility to help support your child. Many states will help you pursue court-ordered child support from the father of the baby.

In addition to financial help, you should consider how much your baby's father will be involved in your baby's daily life. Many things will determine his involvement including your relationship with him. How much he desires to be involved and whether you want him to be involved are some considerations you will need to factor in as you think about this decision.

Your Choice

How Can I Know if This is the Best Decision for Me?

The best decision is an informed decision. It is important to take the time to get all the information on your options to know what is best for you and your child.

Talk openly and honestly with your family and friends. Those who know you best can be a source of help for you as you consider becoming a parent and all the many changes it will bring to your life.

Raising a child is a full-time job and thinking through the challenges that come along with these responsibilities will help you be the best parent you can be.

Taking the time, gathering the information, and seeking counsel will help you feel assured that you have made the best choice.

Expenses

Isn't Having a Child Expensive?

You may be able to work either a full or part-time job. Some jobs offer health care benefits for both you and your child. If you are going to school, you may be able to qualify for assistance that will help with living expenses as well.
